Many people today are concerned about the environment. One important issue is plastic pollution. Plastic is widely used because it is cheap and solid. However, when it is thrown away, it can take hundreds of years to break down. It doesn't disappear in a few days. This causes serious problems for oceans and wildlife. For example, sea turtles often think that plastic bags are jellyfish, which can be dangerous for them. Some countries are trying to reduce plastic waste by stopping one-use plastic products like straws and shopping bags. Others encourage recycling and the use of reusable items. Although these efforts are helpful, the problem is still growing. To solve it, people must change their habits and governments need to create stricter laws to protect the planet.
